Letters of Advice from America's Children

To celebrate National Handwriting Day, the Handwriting Without Tears company has invited students from all over the country to write letters to President-Elect Obama, to be delivered to our new President on January 23rd. To date, tens of thousands of children across America have pledged to be a part of history in the making, among them the scholars of Henry Johnson's Homeroom 2B. Read their thoughts below!

Dear Mr. Obama,
What does it feel like in the White House? I have an idea. I think stores should have potato chips free on Fridays.
From, Genevia

Dear Barak Obama,
Can we have free stuff and can we have $1,000? You should bring some to the bank and charity. Then we will have money for people that have no money to get food and to go to a job and find one too.
Bring it and put the money in a ticket to help our school and bring snacks and equipment too.
Catrina

Dear Barak Obama,
Could you say that kids have to go to school every day until 2:00 pm except Friday? It will be great! This is history. This is the first black President! Could you visit my school? Could you give me money every Wednesday? Could everyone in the world have pets?
Your Friend,
Julian

Dear Barak Obama,
It is great that you won. This is the first black president. Can you lower the prices? How are your kids doing and your wife doing too?
Love,
Dahjae

Dear Barak Obama,
What do you eat? What do you drink? Do you feel bad for John McCain? Is your house big or small? You should make the stores prices go down for Christmas!
Your Friend,
Osumanu
